In contrast to the ideas of Friedrich von Hayek, who is often called the "father of the Austrian School", this book claims that the socialism of Karl Marx has its own intellectual and historical roots. The text of the book was originally delivered as a series of lectures at the University of Chicago in the 1933–1934 academic year. The lectures were produced as a book by George Shull and published by The University of Chicago Press in September 1944. In The Road to Serfdom, Hayek argues that the motivation behind the state's centralizing programs is the hope of achieving a higher political and economic order, but that the acts themselves have as their result the dissipation of the individual's freedom. The Road to Serfdom was widely debated when first published, and won the Pulitzer Prize for General Non-Fiction in 1945. Conception Hayek originally proposed the lectures on which The Road to Serfdom was based in 1933. Hayek originally envisioned his study as a continuation of The Constitution of Liberty, which treats chiefly politics, law and education; the economy, however, requires a different treatment. Hayek's interest in the economy stems from his admiration for the early Chicago School of economics, including the works of Thorstein Veblen, Louis Kelso, Gary Becker, George Stigler, and Sam Bowles. Hayek's study is essentially an intellectual defense of free markets and the role of laissez-faire policies in modern society. Hayek bases his arguments on his ideas of evolution and the unintended consequences of actions. He claimed: "The ultimate conclusion [of his study] is that the road to the serfdom must always remain through the road to the liberty." Hayek became an Austrian school economist primarily because of the philosophy of laissez-faire economics. According to this philosophy, governments should not interfere in ba244e880a
