In the previous funding cycle we developed non-invasive methods for the assessment of the dynamics of plasmatic cell-free DNA (cfDNA) in healthy human subjects and in patients with cancer. In addition to the quantification of cfDNA, we have analyzed the quality of plasma cfDNA (determined by the length of cfDNA fragments) in cancer patients. As a result, the paucity of circulating free DNA sequences in the blood of cancer patients was established, which provides a basis for the development of sensitive methods for early detection of neoplastic diseases and evaluation of the efficacy of treatment and follow-up. We then developed a set of non-invasive methods for the assessment of the dynamics of cfDNA in plasma. With the development of such new sensitive, non-invasive methods for the detection of cfDNA fragments, we identified differences between the concentrations of cfDNA measured in cancer patients and healthy donors, and we found that the concentration of
