We would be delighted if you would come and do the test on X date, as best as you can. The test will take place on X date, as best if possible. A: We would be delighted if you would come and do the test on X date, as best as you can. We are delighted to go the test on the X date, as best as we can. Both versions contain the non-finite verb as best as, but they are different in meaning. We can see that it is best as in the first example. It shows an effective/beneficial state of being which is happy. We could say, for example, "She wants to be as happy as she can be." We would be delighted is a past tense of the verb to be, so in the first example, it is used in the present tense to clarify what we are doing or expressing to someone. We would be delighted is a phrase that means that we are happy. It is usually followed by the more formal and less friendly word as.
