The presence of AhR ligands in surface water is of particular concern because these chemicals are potentially harmful to aquatic species and human health. Three municipal wastewater treatment plants in the Upper Midwest were studied for the presence of four commonly studied AhR ligands, dioxin, hexachlorobenzene (HCB), triphenyltin (TPhT), and octachlorostyrene (OCS). Degradation studies of AhR ligands found in influent to treatment plant were also conducted. The results of the study showed that all four AhR ligand removal during wastewater treatment revealed that all ligands were not degraded during biological treatment and that HCB was degraded during coagulation and sedimentation treatment, with no degradation of TPhT and OCS. ** For the full copyright and license information, please view the LICENSE * file that was distributed with this source code. */ namespace Symfony\Component\CssSelector\Node; /** * Interface for all node children. ** 2d92ce491b
