The previously reported emergence of an SARS-CoV-2 coinfection has led to the reintroduction of the Nipah virus (NiV) as a neglected pathogen causing severe encephalitis and mortality in the region of India.

**Methods:** We collected clinically suspected patients of SARS-CoV-2 from May to June 2020 with suggestive laboratory parameters for other respiratory pathogens at our Tertiary Care Hospital. Samples were subjected to an initial molecular screening for SARS-CoV-2 nucleic acid using the Reverse Transcription Loop-mediated Isothermal Amplification (RT-LAMP) assay, followed by a confirmatory real-time RT-PCR test. Further, screening for NiV nucleic acid was performed in these samples using an in-house real-time RT-PCR.

**Results:** Of 29 suspected SARS-CoV-2-positive patients, 15 (52.7%) were found to be positive for NiV RNA, of which 6 (20%) tested negative by SARS-CoV-2 RT-PCR (referred to as "false negatives"). All cases had a history of direct contact with bats (2 cases), milk and water from a cow (2 cases each), leaf juice from a tamarind tree (1 case), and milk from a buffalo (1 case) along with a history of consuming beef in 11 (73.3%) cases. Two cases had no contact with these substances. The mean duration of illness was 5 days, and of the six cases with available data, five were males, and all were farmers. The affected patients showed high fever, conjunctival congestion, diarrhea, low-grade leukopenia, lymphopenia, thrombocytopenia, and normal liver and renal functions. A majority (73.3%) of the cases had bilateral patchy infiltrates on chest X-ray.

**Conclusion:** The presence of Nipah virus RNA in the throat swabs of SARS-CoV-2-positive patients is a plausible explanation for the false negative RT-PCR test results. Moreover, the potential for cross-reaction between the NiV and SARS-CoV-2 reverse-transcription loop-
