A project A that includes project B and project C that include project D. I want to have a clean separation between them, so that when I modify project A, I do not have to modify project C, which project D will use. How can I do that? I've thought about having project A as a git submodule of project C, but I don't think this is the best solution, since I don't want project C to know about project A. A: I've found that the best workflow is to have 3 git repositories, one parent with all the dependencies, another parent with the "core" project (with maybe a few others) and a third one in which I can keep my NPM package (which I like to use for the dependencies). I have a post with some more details about this workflow at In short, this is my global git structure: . |—— angular-cli.config.js |—— package-lock.json |—— package.json |——
