So, we bought a brand new laptop today but it came with Windows 7 installed but the guys at the shop where I got it said I can get a free upgrade to Windows 10. So i downloaded the iso of Windows 7 64 bit via torrent and the installer did it's thing without any problems. I picked a name for the disc, ran the installer again, created a system restore point and re-installed windows 7. All went well apart from the disc I named was 32bit. I run the disc in compatibility mode for Win7 and got an error "Windows could not start because of the following error: 0x80000003. . So, I downloaded the 64bit edition from the Microsoft site and ran that instead. The disc worked and is booted in compatibility mode but it's not recognized as an actual install and it's not a proper repair option. I went into the Options for booting in compatibility mode and selected that it boot in compatibility mode and then run the 32bit disc but the only option I have is Run a system repair disc. What's the fix? A: I downloaded the 32 bit version off Microsoft's website and used the Windows 7 repair tool. Q: How to Export only the required fields from GridView
