This can come quite in handy if your valuables get damaged or stolen, in case you want to file for an insurance claim, for instance. Since this is a spreadsheet file, you can simply drop it on the hard drive and open it. Alternatively, you can store it on portable devices with support for the XLS format and use it whenever you're on the go. Upon initialization, you may switch to the "Inventory" sheet from "Bonus". So, you can write the name, location, serial and model number, manufacturer name and address, city, state, ZIP code and telephone number for each item. It would be useful to attach a picture of the object in question as well (the images can be resized to fit each cell in the table). Evidently, you can create your own fields with additional, relevant information on a particular valuable item. Once you are done writing the document, it's a good idea to keep it somewhere safe and, preferably online, so you can access it from any location in case of emergency. All in all, Inventory spreadsheet can benefit all people who want to be cautious when it comes to their personal property. Plus, the author provides some useful tips.
