Like any thought, it starts with a central idea, such as a question, then branches out, moving outward and exploring as it moves. This is the typical flow of a mind map, especially in educational settings: →TOPIC →BRANCH For example, let's say we are brainstorming the creation of a poster. The central idea would be: "What would be the best way to teach my students?". The branch out of this idea might branch into a top-down understanding of the topic: -It is directed from left to right, so we would start with a high level overview, say about the overall concept, and then move into more detail. -In this
