The foremost requirement is the pain relief. Picking a reputable, well-trained provider for your pain relief is just as important as selecting the type of treatment. Many pain clinics in your area might offer a series of different types of treatments, but it might be up to you to determine which one meets your individual needs. Choosing the wrong provider will only result in wasting time and money and going in for treatments that aren't suited for your needs. If you follow the instructions from your provider, then you'll know that you're getting the type of relief that suits your needs. The treatment should be related to the problem. One of the most common causes of pain is an injury. When you visit a doctor or a physiotherapist, the first thing they do is look into your injury. They need to examine the problem thoroughly and assess the severity of the injury and your pain levels. If you have any problems with your shoulder, you might want to ask your provider for an x-ray. You might also want to ask for an MRI, which is a tool that is used to diagnose any problems in the brain or spinal cord. If your injury isn't severe, then you might receive the required treatments at home. If it's more severe, then you might be referred to a pain clinic in your area. You should also choose a provider who is well-suited to treat your pain. If you're regularly visiting their clinic, then they should know your body well. They should also be experienced in the type of pain relief that you require. If you're a sports person or an endurance athlete, you might be interested in the type of therapy that involves physical activities. In that case, you might want to choose a provider who is experienced in injury care. Your provider might refer you to an acupuncturist, massage therapist, or a chiropractor. They should also be willing to work with you to find the right treatment to solve the problem. Either way, you shouldn't be afraid of changing your provider if they're not working for you. If you feel that they are doing a substandard job, then you'll be in the right position to find a new provider. What's more, you'll be able to take advantage of great deals when you switch providers. If you want to know

....” It is the Legislature's prerogative to require as a condition for the license to perform that the contractor pay damages for an injury sustained by a third person caused by the contractor's negligence.” Id. at 98. The supreme court's “construction of the statute as requiring” the contractor to “present[] evidence of fault on the part of the subcontractor” in such a situation does not negate the idea that the contractor itself is the proximate cause of the third-party's injury. See id. [¶20.] One of the purposes of a comparative negligence statute is to provide “for a reduction of damages in those cases where an injured party's own negligence, either active or passive, bears some causal relationship to the injury.” Christensen v. Van Alstine, 88 S.D. 68, 79, 216 N.W.2d 528, 535 (1974). And while the statute also provides a tortfeasor who has a fault equal to or greater than that of the plaintiff a benefit against the other tortfeasors, it does not give a tortfeasor who has a fault less than that of the plaintiff a benefit against the other tortfeasors. To that extent, it is different from a comparative fault statute, which allows a jury to reduce the plaintiff's award of damages by assessing the relative -6- #25706 fault of the parties involved. See SDCL 15-1-13 (“The jury shall determine the amount of damages that would be reasonable compensation for [the plaintiff's] injury, if any, and the [tortfeasors] whose conduct was a legal cause of the injury.” (emphasis added)). [¶21.] The Gordons' sole authority for their argument that a contractor is not a joint tortfeasor for
