Cognitive Function Following Temporal Lobe Lobectomy for Tumors. Temporal lobectomy (TL) is performed to treat intractable epilepsy or severe psychiatric conditions. In the former, the cognitive outcome of the patients is generally good. However, in patients who receive TL for psychiatric disorders, the outcomes of cognitive functions and their change are not fully understood. A consecutive series of 74 patients who underwent TL were examined preoperatively and at 6 months to 3 years postoperatively. There were 10 patients who underwent complex TL for intractable epilepsy and 64 patients who underwent unilateral TL for the treatment of intractable temporal lobe epilepsy. The control group included 30 consecutive patients who underwent unilateral anterior temporal resection. The visual recognition memory test and rapid visual information processing (RVIP) test were conducted to evaluate the changes in cognitive function. The visual recognition memory test revealed that the mean visual recognition memory scores postoperatively in the TL group were significantly better than those of the control group. Postoperatively, there was no significant difference in the mean visual recognition memory scores between the TL group and the control group. However, the mean increase in visual recognition memory scores from the preoperative examination to the mean value at 6 months was 11.0 ± 8.3 in the TL group and 7.7 ± 7.2 in the control group. In the TL group, the mean RVIP test results were significantly better than those of the control group at 6 months postoperatively. However, there was no significant difference in the mean RVIP test results between the TL group and the control group at 6 months postoperatively. These results indicate that TL is effective for the improvement of visual recognition memory. However, there is little evidence that the cognitive function of the TL group improved faster than that of the control group.

What's New In?

(CNN) In the days after the death of Harvey Weinstein, when the #MeToo movement was in full bloom, the media frequently discussed the behavior of "casting couch" directors, a phrase so loaded with sexual overtones it's been used to describe the most innocent situations. When the actress Brittney Wilson, now a freshman in college, went to meet a famous director at the age of 17, she didn't feel as though she had anything to fear. "People were calling me a 'pussy' and everything back then," Wilson told CNN's Sam Berman on the "AC360" Special Report. "So it wasn't so much that I had to do it; it was kind of comforting. It felt like I was doing the right thing, and I was following my dreams." Later, the director told her: "When I'm finished with you, you're going to be the biggest star in Hollywood." Wilson said she took the job anyway -- thinking it was a done deal. "And then it never happened." "I'm not going to read an interview or watch a movie from that point forward because it's just going to remind me of what happened," she said. "I don't even want to know anything about that period of my life because it's been haunted me for the last eight years." Fortunately for Wilson, now 27, many of the influential figures in the film industry who allegedly made her uncomfortable have died or been fired. JUST WATCHED Actress Brittney Wilson tells AC360 Replay More Videos... So that just feels like too many opportunities were wasted." Recently, Wilson told Berman she regretted taking the job. "I even thought about getting back into my writing, and trying to get some of the experiences I had with the 'casting couch' to help me," she said. "But, at the end of the day, it's not about me. So that I'm not sitting here thinking, 'If I could've done this, I would've felt differently.'" She added, "When you finally tell someone, it doesn't feel like the weight is lifted from you, like, 'Wow, I'm OK.'" But it could take years before this experience
