Windows lets you make a bit of every computer activity available through the default set of features. However, you might not need all options, and get the feeling of an overwhelmed environment. In this regard, XTweaker comes with a set of different options in order to disable or hide specific Windows functions and features. Can be used on the go The application can easily be carried around on a USB flash drive, because it doesn't even need to be installed on your computer to properly function. However, you need to make sure that the PC you install it on is fitted with .NET Framework, because it was built on this platform and is one of the requirements. There's only a compact panel you get to work with. A handful of customization tweaks only need to be checked, with the possibility to select more at a time, depending on what you want to manage. In case you're not really sure about what each tweak does, hovering the cursor over it shows a description in a dedicated section. Leaves more to be desired Sadly, there aren't many features you can look into, and they're mostly oriented towards security, but not too related to one another. Among others, you can choose to disable low diskspace check, remove shared documents, disable indexing service, add command prompt here context menu option, and a few others. What's more, changes you apply need to modify specific entries in system registries, so it's best to make a backup first. The application also needs to be launched with administrator privileges so it can freely access target areas. However, it doesn't remember changes you make, and there's no option to revert changes, so you need to be sure you want to apply a specific option. To sum it up Taking everything into consideration, we can say that XTweaker comes with good intentions, and wants to make Windows a better environment.

However, areas it targets create a bit of confusion and there seems to be a general inconsistency in between. Moreover, there's no possibility to undo changes, which might lead to compatibility or other issues in the end. Deleting files with Windows Explorer When you delete files with Windows Explorer, what happens is that they are not actually deleted. They are simply marked for removal and later on, they will be emptied from the Recycle Bin. This is how the Recycle Bin works. However, if you delete files with your preferred file manager, the files are actually deleted. This means that you get an empty folder, once you remove them. This is a major difference because you can recover deleted files that were removed with Windows Explorer. If you want to remove files with Windows Explorer, you need to do the following: 1. Click on the Recycle Bin and click on Empty Recycle Bin. You will see an empty bin. If the Recycle Bin is already empty, you do not need to empty it again. 2. Now, remove the files you want to delete with the File Manager. 3. When you finish, just restart your computer to see the files that were deleted. Removing files with Recycle Bin Once you have deleted files with Windows Explorer, they are not automatically removed from the Recycle Bin. This means that you will need to empty the Recycle Bin to remove the files. You can do this in the following way: 1. Go to the Recycle Bin and click on Empty Recycle Bin. This will create an empty Recycle Bin. 2. Open the
