AN AUSTRALIAN IMPOSTOR CLAIMS TO BE WESTERN UNION CHIEF An Australian man has been sentenced to 14 years in prison for falsely claiming to be the chief of the U.S. bank that closed in 2008 after he made more than $2 million in online fraud.

SIMEON GERSON March 29, 2014 CAPE TOWN, South Africa — An Australian man has been sentenced to 14 years in prison for falsely claiming to be the chief of the U.S. bank that closed in 2008 after he made more than $2 million in online fraud. Simeon Gerson, who was accused of defrauding 800 banks and credit unions of $2.6 million, was sentenced in a Cape Town courtroom on Monday. He was found guilty in February of fraud and money laundering. The judge found he had "begged for mercy." Defence lawyer Michael Lovell said he was devastated by the sentence. Gerson, who admitted to South Africa's Independent Communications Authority that he was the fraudster who fronted the fake Web scalar within block Is there any way to initialize a symbol inside a block?

Something like this

#[macro_export] macro_rules! test
{ ($x:expr) => { let _z: f32 =
1.0/0.0; // error: cannot use an unbound value of type f32 println!("{}", _z) } } (See the link for another similar use case that has a similar answer: Is there a way to do an initializer for a let variable?)
A: You can pass in a tuple of

initializers, and initializer for the variable can be built into the initializer for the tuple.

#[macro_export] macro_rules! test
{ ($x:expr) => { let _z: f32 =
(1.0/0.0).init; println!("{}", _z) } }

I've omitted the (let _z: f32) part and just use the.init form.

Playground A: Thanks to Robert's comment I ran into the same problem and found a great github repo which solved it for me:

---

macro_rules! local_init {
($name:ident [ $x:tt ] $init:expr )
=> { $((($x) => { $( let _name =
$name.clone(); _name.value_ $init.clone(); )* })* }); } For your
