Should I set the font size to 8pt for Arial, or should I set it to 20% of the width of the longest row or longest column? A: It is not good to use absolute values when referencing values. If you set the font size to 8pt, you can only set a font size of 8pt to every row and every column. This means that if the longest row has more characters, they will be left to the side and you won't get the full size of the characters. I would set the font size to 20% of the widest column or row to keep the font size uniform. Structural basis for the recognition of the motif CCATCT by the p65 subunit of RNA polymerase II. Transcription by the RNA polymerase II (pol II) in the cell nucleus is a highly regulated process. Pol II transcripts play a fundamental role in the expression of nearly all genes and in the regulation of cell growth. The p65 subunit of pol II (CBP) is a very abundant protein, and a substantial portion of the total cellular protein is in the form of p65/CBP heterodimers. In the present study, the molecular basis for the sequence-specific binding of p65 to the CCATCT nucleotide motif was elucidated using a combination of molecular
