ImageDropr is a program that accelerates the upload of images to Flickr. File Preference is a small utility that can be used to quickly set the preferences for file and folder Open or Save actions (drag'n'drop). It's based on the Drag'n'Drop settings settings as Windows XP provides. The first toolbar represents the actual size (number of bytes) of the selected file, this is displayed next to the Save or Open in File Browser item in the context menu. The second toolbar displays the number of files/folders that match the selection - it is displayed next to the '...' menu item when the file selection contains multiple files (this message is available with Windows XP). The third toolbar displays the number of 'bits' (for images - as the file size is displayed in kb on the first toolbar) or 'KB' for folders. The fourth and final toolbar displays the number of files/folders saved or overwrite operations that occur. The 5th and final toolbar is a small representation of the file size of the selected file (using the first toolbar size), it is displayed on mouseover and serves as a preview. File Preference (contributions by GroupInfo): This is a small utility, that operates on files (libraries like aswell as any selected folder) that can be dragged and dropped on it. The program is using Open/Save menu items as Windows provides: When you drag a file/folder with these menu items, the program will change its selection depending on if it is a new file or a existing file. If the program is started the first time with more than one file selected, when you drag a file or folder on it, you will see two menus: "Save" and "Open".

When you drag a folder on it, the second menu will be "Open" - but when you drag a new file on it the first menu will be "Open" as well. (As the Drag'n'Drop has been enabled.) The program is set to work on the files/folders' file type, its size (again - as Windows does) and the operating system it is running on. It will delete any existing settings if you start it for the first time with more than one file/folder selected. The program will: *

check if you are opening or saving a file or a folder; * if you are opening a
