Uterine contractility: distribution and characterization of receptors for oxytocin. Gonadotropins regulate uterine function through intracellular processes mediated by hormone receptors located in the endometrial cell plasma membrane. Binding of gonadotropin to its receptor initiates specific changes in the cell that result in a coordinated sequence of secretory, cytoplasmic, and nuclear events. In the present work we studied the structural and pharmacological characteristics of the oxytocin receptor in the rat endometrium. A strong homology was found between the oxytocin receptor and the luteinizing hormone-releasing hormone receptor (greater than 90% amino acid identity). A differential pharmacological profile was observed for the oxytocin receptor that was characterized by a significant sensitivity to oxytocin antagonists. The possibility of the presence of more than one type of oxytocin receptor on the endometrial plasma membranes is discussed.

have been better to come out and say, "You may be in possession of a firearm. Since it is not in the hands of a police officer we are not going to take it away from you just yet, but if you don't blow yourself away or start a shooting spree you can keep it. Have a nice day." Instead, the detectives told Ostertag they wanted to search his vehicle and that "in order to do that we have to have your consent to search the vehicle." (Emphasis added.) This is one of the classic "catch-22" games known to those versed in the law: by asking for consent to search, the police effectively used Ostertag's reasonable expectation of privacy as a convenient justification for their search, whereas if they had instead told him that they were searching the vehicle simply because they had to, their statement would have ineluctably triggered Ostertag's reasonable expectation of privacy. Regardless of what Ostertag thought the detectives meant when they gave him the impression that they were going to search his vehicle, it is nonetheless certain that "in order to search the defendant's vehicle, the defendant must consent to the search." See United States v. Garcia, 890 F.2d at 247 (emphasis in original). In the recent case of Rodriguez, the Supreme Court indicated that the use of the "in order to" terminology prior to a search is not to be judged entirely by its content. See 452 U.S. at invention, each printhead comprises a silicon chip having a substrate and a plurality of printhead elements deposited on the substrate. The silicon chip has a chip front surface and a chip back surface. The silicon chip is mounted on a support member. The support member includes a first part which faces the chip front surface of the silicon chip and a second part which faces the chip back surface of the silicon chip. The first and second parts of the support member are operatively coupled to each other to sandwich the silicon chip therebetween. Thus, the thermal contacts of the printhead with a substrate having a liquid to be printed on the front surface of the silicon chip and the back surface of the silicon chip are assured. In the printing device of the invention, the printhead is not electrically connected to any electrical connector, but the electrical connector is electrically connected to the substrate. Therefore, the printhead having the structure as described above is electrically connected to the substrate via the electrical connector, and the substrate is electrically connected to a circuit substrate in the printing apparatus. The printhead is thus detachably mounted on the substrate. Thus, the printhead can be replaced as needed. The substrate has a plurality of contact pads thereon. The support member is soldered to the contact pads of the substrate. Therefore, the substrate having the contact pads is fixed to the support member, and the silicon chip can be detachably mounted on the substrate having the plurality of contact pads. The contact pads are arranged on a position which is equivalent to that in which the plurality of nozzles of the silicon chip are arranged. The contacts pads and the nozzles of the silicon chip are disposed at a one-to-one correspondence. Therefore, no displacement is required between the positions of the contact pads and the positions of the nozzles. Each of the plurality of nozzles is arranged at a position which is equivalent to the position of the corresponding printhead element. Each nozzle is arranged in the area in which the corresponding printhead element is arranged. Therefore, the printhead can be mounted on the support member with a precision of approximately a nozzle pitch of the printhead. Therefore, the silicon chip and the substrate are highly precisely aligned with each other, and an alignment precision of approximately xc2xd a nozzle pitch of the printhead can be realized. The plurality of nozzles are arranged at a pitch of approximately xc2xd a nozzle pitch of the printhead. Therefore, the printhead can be easily
