dozen or more tabs when browsing the web or working on various projects. After a certain point, finding specific pages becomes almost impossible, but there are ways to make your life easier. One of them is Aerys - Tab Manager, a Chrome extension designed to help you organize large numbers of tabs during your browsing sessions. It gives you an overview of your opened tabs, sorts them based on domain and lets you close unnecessary ones with very little effort. Find the tabs you need with the help of the Mad King himself After installing the extension, you can just continue browsing as usual. However, once you have opened a certain number of tabs, you will notice the pot displayed in the Chrome menu gradually filling up with wildfire. The icon's color changes based on tab width, and a tab count is also displayed. If browsing becomes difficult, you can bring up the tab list by clicking the extension's icon. You will see that all pages are sorted based on domain, and it is much easier to find the tabs you are looking for when their titles are no longer visible a69d392a70 to do with the Chrome extension Aaron Ekblad for Tasks and Slack for Chrome. • View your Slack messages in the Chrome extension.• Add a new list to your Tasks list.• Add a new task to your list.• View the due date of existing tasks.• View tasks with due dates. Features • View your Slack messages in the Chrome extension. (With Slack, this is called "real time notifications".) • Add a new list to your Tasks list. (The "Lists" button in the extension.) • Add a new task to your list. (The "Add to list" button in the extension.) • View the due date of existing tasks. (The "Tasks due soon" button in the extension.) • View tasks with due dates. (The "Tasks with due dates" button in the extension.) How the Chrome Extension works The extension reads the Slack API to obtain a token from the Slack team that you have configured. If you use your personal account, we have the token already. If you use a team account, this extension will request a token and then try to retrieve the token from Slack. The Slack API allows reading messages from the Slack team. Since we use real-time notifications, we can view your messages even when you don't use the Slack team. The extension retrieves the most recent message and assigns that message to a new list. The service retrieves the next message and assigns that message to a new task. Because the Slack

Changes: Fixed issue that might cause tab arrangement to be incorrectly saved Refresh of sort order when clicking the view button on a domain was disabled Fixed issue that could cause the tabs to close when pressing the back button Refreshed the extension's visuals based on feedback Some errors in the interface were fixed Improvement: Search domains is now more accurate Special thanks to (in reverse alphabetical order, but the first for his feedback): Can't say I've used it in a while, so I don't have a ton of data. But I do remember the feature that took tabs by domain and displayed them in order. This is a pretty good update to that feature and makes it more configurable. Really useful.Catalytic bioengineering by metabolic feedback loops. Until the late 1980s, few bacteria could synthesize industrially significant molecules. However, in the last 10 years, bacterial genome sequences, the development of new techniques for genome manipulation, and bioengineering strategies have provided new ways of using microorganisms to produce useful metabolites. Microorganisms encode enzymes that can synthesize specific substrates such as amino acids, sugars, and organic acids, as well as cofactors such as vitamins, using catalytic reactions. In this review, we discuss how metabolic pathways can be engineered to maximize the production of metabolites of interest. Our focus is on enzymes that catalyze transamination, decarboxylation, reduction, and phosph
