Q: My Mac turns off after I type "sudo nano" I'm running OS X 10.9.3. I type this: sudo nano /etc/hosts I'm then able to type commands in the nano editor and edit the hosts file. But, when I close the nano editor and try to reboot the computer, I get an error, saying that the OS has crashed. I'm able to reboot the computer and boot into safe mode and use the terminal, however. I don't know what the problem is. Any suggestions? A: By default, nano launches with the -u option. In your case that means that the command sudo nano /etc/hosts was run as root. When you are already root, it is generally a good idea to start nano as your user: $ sudo -u ben sh
