The employees of Venezuelan state-owned oil company PDVSA have created a new economic model for the global market, based on the removal of products from the markets, writes the economist William Ciro. In the opinion of the analyst, this affects PDVSA at every level. The economic expert explains that the decision of the company to suspend the payment of salaries due to a global shortage of funds, but without any regard for the economic and political consequences that this may entail for the country, is an indication of its unsustainable model. The economic expert underlines that the decision will
