Efficacy of polyclonal interferon-beta treatment in patients with chronic hepatitis C: correlation between hepatitis C virus genotypes and response rates. The clinical significance of pretreatment hepatitis C virus (HCV) genotypes has been well defined in patients with chronic HCV infection. However, the significance of pretreatment genotype in patients responding to interferon (IFN) therapy has not been defined. To assess the relation between viral genotypes and response rates in patients with chronic hepatitis C who are treated with polyclonal IFN. Seventy-four HCV-infected patients were treated with polyclonal IFN-alpha2b. The patients were divided into 3 groups according to pretreatment HCV-RNA genotypes: HCV-genotype 1 ($n = 26$); 2 ($n = 17$); and 3 ($n = 27$). Of 74 patients, 59 (80.8%) were treated for 48 wk. The responders were defined as patients with a reduction in serum alanine aminotransferase to normal levels and sustained viral response ($n = 28$). To assess the effect of prior therapy, 35 (47.3%) patients had previously received IFN and ribavirin. Of the 24 patients with the genotype 1 infection, 15 (62.5%) had an eradication of HCV in the chronic phase (P acetyl-O-hexoside were also detected. The presence of these metabolites was observed in the analyzed sample corresponding to fermentation in the presence of soluble starch. This finding is similar to the results of previous studies
