The authors investigated the activity of the m. rectus femoris, m. vastus lateralis, and m. vastus medialis in 14 patients with total hip replacement (THR). The analysis of these muscles was performed with surface EMG during the surgical procedure and after the removal of the prosthesis. The authors report also on the clinical and functional results obtained in these patients. There's a new face behind the wheel of the Virginia Tech football program. Former Army offensive lineman Chandler Harnish took the job on Saturday as the Hokies' new offensive line coach. He replaces Mike Groh, who was promoted to the role of wide receivers coach last week. "I'm excited to get this opportunity," Harnish said. "I'm going to work really hard and do everything I can to help our team." Harnish, who graduated from Virginia Tech in May with a bachelor's degree in health and kinesiology, played the past two years as an offensive lineman at Army, starting 21 of the 31 games he appeared in. He spent the previous year on the staff of Pittsburgh's offensive line coach, Alex Pelissero. "Chandler has a great work ethic and has been a model student-athlete during his college career," Hokies coach Frank Beamer said in a statement. "We look forward to his contributions to our program." Harnish, a 6-foot-4, 300-pound senior, started 26 of Army's 31 games at right guard over the last two years, according to West Point's website. He has played in 41 games and started 12 over his four years, and is expected to be one of the top guards in the country when he leaves the service in June. During his time at Tech, Harnish played 80eaf3aba8

When using @RunWith(SpringJUnit4ClassRunner.class), you need to create one Test-Suite per test case. But this is a big overhead in my case as I already have a "main" Test-Suite with hundreds of test methods. Ideally I'd like to create one Test-Suite with hundreds of test methods and use this as a framework. Then I'd create one Test-Case per new test method and start this new test with @RunWith(SpringJUnit4ClassRunner.class). This test would inherit all the class methods from the framework Test-Suite and it could use all features like @Autowired. Unfortunately I cannot create a parent-Test-Suite and inherit from that. But is there a way to avoid to creating one "main" Test-Suite with hundreds of test methods when using the Maven-Failsafe-Plugin? Thank you! A: It is possible to define your own scope for a method. So you can write @RunWith(SpringJUnit4ClassRunner.class) @ScopedTest public class MyTestClass { ... } Then, as long as you don't add any of the annotations, you can write test methods that are "run as a single unit" (you're using the Spring runner) but are scoped to "MyTestClass" You can find the details in the Spring manual. If your test methods only use autowired fields, then you can also scope them to the class itself, as the Spring runner will automatically inject all autowired fields. Q: Is there a way to prevent Google from indexing a page? Is there a way to prevent Google from indexing a page or document? It's a page that is only indexable by a user with a specific role. How can I prevent Google from indexing that page? A: You can apply meta tags which can specify how a user agent should handle the page. for example,
