To find the answers to a question, you will need to click on an "answer", which is typically in the form of a list of categories and subcategories. These are in turn broken down into sub-subcategories as well, which in turn may have sub-subcategories of their own. Clicking on any of these sub-subcategories will take you to a page of categories that are further broken down. A quick search bar located at the top of all of these pages allows you to enter the exact word you're looking for, but if you're not quite sure about what you want, Yahoo answers allows you to search the entire site for a category or sub-category, and even provide more specific keywords. Once you have found what you're looking for, Yahoo answers will tell you exactly how many times the question has been asked within the past year or in a specific time frame. This will let you know if you are asking something that's a little unusual or that is being asked often, which in turn may indicate that there is a more complex solution to the problem or that there is an incorrect assumption being made. If that is the case, you can use the example questions that are provided in the answer to your exact question to try to get to the bottom of the issue by answering your question for yourself and getting the right answer. While Yahoo answers does not provide any sort of grading or pay-for-service, it is still a fantastic way to get all of your answers in one place. Q: Python 2.7: Getting the subdomain of the current page I've been attempting to get the subdomain of the current page in Python 2.7.2 and have been running into problems:

def main(): if '__NIC__' in sys.modules: print("NIC") return #Initialize the request req = requests.get("") #Parse the URL from the last two segments of the path hostname = req.url[req.url.rfind("/"): ] print("The hostname is {}".format(hostname))
```

 However, this function will not work unless I put an extra print before the hostname assignment, like so:

print("Before entering the hostname definition") hostname = req.url[req.url.rfind("/"): ] print("After entering the hostname definition") print("The hostname is {}".format(hostname))

 I'm not sure why this is the case. Is there a way to get the subdomain without having to print to the console? A: Of course there is! Just pass the subdomain name to get the subdomain name from the url using the last segment. You can also get the port number and a few other extra arguments:

```
subdomain = req.url[req.url.rfind("/"): ] if subdomain is None: hostname = req.url.split('/')[2] else: hostname = '{}/{}'.format(req.url[:req.url.rfind("/ ")] , subdomain)
```
