Duplicate items in more than one category group within the same Excel workbook. Duplicate items in more than one category group within the same Excel workbook. Description This feature enables a user to duplicate items in more than one category group within the same Excel workbook. The Duplicate feature also provides an option to delete all items in a particular category group that you want to delete. If a user asks to duplicate items in more than one category group within the same Excel workbook, all these duplicated items will be placed in a separate Excel workbook, and the name of this workbook will be named according to the Category Group Name. The only limitation of this feature is that a user cannot have more than 500 items in a particular category group. In order to duplicate an item in more than one category group within the same Excel workbook, the following steps should be followed: A user double-clicks on the particular item that he wants to duplicate. Open the item in the Category Group Menu. Select the desired Category Group that the item needs to be placed. Click OK. The item will be placed in the selected Category Group. This feature will allow a user to delete all items in a particular Category Group. If a user requests to delete all items in a particular category group that he wants to delete, the following steps should be followed: A user opens the Category Group List and selects the particular category group that needs to be deleted from the list. A user double-clicks on the category group to be deleted. A message will be displayed as "This category group has been removed." A user performs a Shortcut using the Windows + O keyboard shortcut. A message "This category group has been deleted." will appear on the Category Group Menu. For example, to remove all items in the "Sales" category group, the user would perform a Shortcut from the Category Group List using Windows + O. This feature is very useful for a user to identify duplicated items in more than one Category Group within the same Excel workbook. Workaround: You can try to view a copy of the same Excel workbook using the "Open as Read Only" option while you perform this feature. You can try to view a copy of the same Excel

Commercial GPS and mapping apps are played out. The smartphone replacement is here. When GPS got a good name, it was intended for consumers. But in business, GPS has been a long time coming, and now it's ready to move into the mainstream. As smartphones gain the necessary GPS functionality, these apps could be the new standard bearer of navigation and access to local information, moving the business forward. Apple continues to demonstrate an aptitude for tapping into the needs of the enterprise. It's the power of these apps that matter to them, and so for the enterprise, it's far more than a consumer alternative. If you need to expand your services and apps' distribution, all you need is a smartphone and, more importantly, an app. There are two existing areas in which apps can make this journey: enterprise-specific resources and location-based services. The first is the GPS mapping function, which on an app is perfect for road navigation. Apple did this superbly with the iPhone 6s and 6s Plus, with the launch of the free Waze app for iOS. This and similar apps are the best way to map companies, both in-house and when out and about. You can see the Waze app in action (a good example of a road-navigational app): Waze gets my head around, as does another app that is getting a lot of attention: Google Maps. If you're familiar with how that app works, you'll love this because Google Maps can be installed on a smartphone to complement the web version (and also as a stand-alone app). Google Maps is designed for the iPhone as a standalone app, with the hope being that it will be as simple to use as a web service — but I'll come to that shortly. Google Maps is easily available and goes great with the other Google apps. All
