By FranLopez.exe.rarProline-rich nuclear localization sequence in the RNA binding protein hnRNP C1/C2. The full-length amino acid sequence of the human hnRNP C1/C2 is known, and the domain structure has been determined. The human hnRNP

C1/C2 gene has been mapped to chromosome 15q12-q14. Three C-terminal alternatively spliced mRNA transcripts are observed, which are identical except for the presence of exon 26 in one transcript. A cDNA encoding the full-length hnRNP C1 protein was isolated from a human cDNA library. This cDNA has a single open reading frame of 3243 nucleotides encoding a protein with a calculated molecular mass of 40416.6 Da. A proline-rich nuclear localization sequence and a nuclear export sequence are present in the C-terminal half of the protein. The N-terminal half of the protein contains no known sequence

Dietsch/UPI/Barcroft Media/Newscom ( ) In January, Donald Trump ordered a one-time ban on transgender people from serving in the U.S. military. The Times obtained a document showing that the administration had used a non-standard interpretation of the law to justify the order, arguing that transgender people in the military would cause “disruption” and were incapable of having healthy personal relationships. Shortly before that, he ordered the Department of Justice to file a lawsuit seeking to declare that the entire Affordable Care Act was unconstitutional. At the same time, he nominated a conservative

Supreme Court justice, Neil Gorsuch, who was confirmed and, as he was sworn in, made a few references to FDR’s court-packing plan — and then largely walked away from the court itself. Four months later, at Trump’s suggestion, senators agreed to change the filibuster rules to make it easier to get the president’s nominees confirmed. In March, the Senate confirmed 11 more, including Gorsuch (who, again, walked away from the bench in a controversy involving
