A structure-activity relationship study has been undertaken of a series of 30 halogenated phenolic derivatives of 1,3-diphenylguanidine in their effects on the intracellular metabolism and aggregation of ADP-stimulated platelets. The steady-state metabolites found after incubation of the compounds with human platelets were measured by HPLC and identified. An attempt has been made to correlate platelet aggregation to metabolism. Fifteen of the compounds have been found to inhibit platelet aggregation at concentrations similar to their inhibitory activity on ADP metabolism. if (chk_max_chars && file.maxChars > 0 && file.maxChars
