How to find out if  $(a,b)$  is a basis of a vector space or not? I know that  $(a,b)$  being a basis of a vector space means that for every vector  $x \in V$ , there exists a unique basis function  $f(x) \in R[x_1, x_2]$ , where  $a$  is the first variable and  $b$  is the second variable in  $f(x)$ , such that  $x = a b$ . But I don't know how to show that  $(a,b)$  is a basis, in other words I don't know how to find a basis function. A: In  $\mathbb{R}^2$ , the set  $\{(1,0), (0,1)\}$  is a basis, because every vector in  $\mathbb{R}^2$  has a unique representation in the form of a linear combination of the basis elements. Thus, the set  $\{(1,0), (0,1)\}$  is a basis for  $\mathbb{R}^2$ . If  $V$  is a vector space over  $\mathbb{R}$ , then a set  $B$  of elements in  $V$  which spans  $V$  is called a basis. A set of linearly independent elements in  $V$  is also a basis. Ritual and Rituals An African-American woman had dreamed for years of owning her own beauty shop. Although a loving family and excellent character would have blessed her with wealth, this was still a goal. A friend of hers had a beauty shop and would sometimes visit to borrow product from time to time. "Can you loan me a jar of that?" she'd ask. "Sure." She'd return a few weeks later with a smile on her face and a pint of new product. "Thank you," she'd say. "You're welcome." 1cdb36666d
