Photographer's Note Just one stop on my drive to Nairobi from Mombasa a few days ago and I finally got a chance to look this place up. Easily one of the most friendly places I've been in. "Nyambeni" is a village of about 2000 souls. It is famous for the Nairobi Railway Station, which was the first in the world to be electrified in 1918 and was the first station to be electrified in East Africa in 1926. I stayed here overnight and early this morning I took a small walk to Nyambeni. The place is really small and I didn't get to take many pictures. Here we have one of the only church of the place. Other than the church there is a school, a health center (which is really basic and there was no doctor on site) and a small retail center. The whole town has only 3 main roads and it took only few minutes to walk from one side to the other. There were many water fountains in the streets and there were many street vendors and kids enjoying themselves. Another shot from the other side of the church. The backdrop is made of an old brick house. The only building painted in white, a reminder of that old time. I had a great time there and am so looking forward to return at least once. Most people find it hard to believe that the earth's global sea level is rising in such a way to enhance the growth of floodplains. The areas where the sea comes up are increasing in width and are becoming more fertile. On 9th February 2013, the Director of the Climate Change Centre of the North China University of Science and Technology, Dr Zhou Kejian, showed a slide in which he showed the overall map of China. He indicated and explained that the sea level had risen steadily in China for over 100 years. It is not known when and why the sea level has risen. The rise has been steady. The areas where the sea comes up are increasing in width, but the land areas between the water are also increasing in height. Dr Zhou explained that the thing that is changing is that the area where the river water flows is expanding. This is because many of the rivers that run through these regions are not running where they were used to running before. The length of the rivers has been increased and they have extended their reach to a much wider area. More

Besides the usual Doppler flow analysis parameters, we observed, in the absence of any venous constriction, a hyperemic response of the posterior wall of the left renal artery to the selective pressure test, suggesting a reduced resistance of the arterial wall (effect of the posterior wall) and a normal function of the parenchyma (mean
