NASA's Roadmap to Mars NASA's Roadmap to Mars is a proposal designed to have humans land on Mars in the 2030s, by which time, NASA hopes to have mastered the technology necessary to build a space elevator. Overview NASA's Roadmap to Mars was created by the Mars Program Planning Group and initially presented at the 2007 International Astronautical Congress. It also serves as the basis for the Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter's science investigation: the Mars Science Laboratory. History In 2007, the Mars Program Planning Group (MPPG), consisting of representatives of various government agencies and NASA centers, convened to discuss the vision for NASA's goals in the future. The MPPG presented their ideas to NASA on March 20, 2007, in the form of a presentation entitled "Mars: Journey to Revolution" The presentation was presented to an audience of approximately 300 scientists and engineers, including policy makers, and press, and at a later date was widely distributed. A subsequent presentation, "NASA's Roadmap to Mars", was presented to an audience of over 200 at the 2008 NASA / American Astronautical Society interdisciplinary conference on "Exploration Beyond Earth: Journey to Mars". The Roadmap to Mars presentation has been criticized for its failure to propose a timeline, and has been discussed in some detail on popular blogs and in space journalism. Specifications The Roadmap to Mars proposes (2030) as the approximate date for a robotic mission to Mars (possibly even to capture an asteroid), and an eventual human mission to Mars within the 2030s. The MPPG sets the timeline for missions to Mars to (2033) and (2036). The Roadmap to Mars sets forth a "Vision for Exploration of Mars 1cdb36666d
