I cover layer basics in Chapter 6. The U.S. Postal Service uses Photoshop to format and print the millions of envelopes that it sends out. For more information on mail-processing and other uses, see `Creating your first document Photoshop is a tool to create documents. The first thing you need to do is create a blank document. To do that, follow these steps: 1. Open a new document on your hard drive. When you open a document, a new window opens on your hard drive where you can add or modify the layers and import photos. I recommend that you save all your documents to a folder that you have on the same hard drive as your computer. If you move the hard drive to a new computer or laptop, you have to move all of the files, documents, and folders from the old computer's hard drive to the new one. Make sure that you back up your files frequently. We cover saving documents in Chapter 5. 2. Choose File⇒New. A small gray box appears on the left side of the menu. 3. From the menu, choose Photoshop | File⇒New. The Open dialog box appears with a new blank document open. (You may see additional document templates, such as Web and Spreadsheet, depending on what program you open from.) 4. Select Photoshop Document from the File Type drop-down list. 5. Check the Create With Template option. If you don't do this, the Photoshop Document template appears in the window. We discuss templates in the upcoming section, "Creating a template," and cover them in depth in Chapter 2. 6. Name the document and then click Save. The file name appears at the bottom of the document window, as shown in Figure 3-1. 7. Choose File⇒Save As. The Save As dialog box appears. 8. Type a name for the file. The file type and location for the new document appear in the dialog box. Leave the file type set to Photoshop (.psd) by selecting it from the Type drop-down list. If you create several documents, keep the Save as Type in the same location so that the file names always follow the same pattern and so that you don't have to keep typing
