Watt, the NFL's reigning Defensive Player of the Year, rushed to the hospital on Friday morning with a concussion. He'll probably be able to play in the team's divisional round playoff game on Sunday against the Indianapolis Colts, but his status should be monitored this week. Watt had to leave the team's locker room for a few minutes before the start of Friday's first practice. At halftime of Houston's first game against Tennessee, he was in concussion protocol and sent to the locker room. On Thursday, he didn't practice. Watt and the Texans reached the playoffs for the second straight year after winning the AFC South in a 42-7 victory over the Jaguars. He is one of the premier pass-rushing defensive ends in the league, collecting a record 12.5 sacks in 14 games this season.
