This study examines the effects of limb amputation at different body levels on biomechanical variables of the body and the lower limb. The research was a cross-sectional and controlled study. Eleven subjects participated in the study; seven were unilateral transfemoral, two unilateral transfemoral and bilateral below-knee, and two bilateral above-knee amputation. Clinical examination was performed on each subject. They were made to stand on the limb being investigated, on which the forces of the prosthetic socket were measured and the variables relating to the movements of the prosthetic leg and trunk were measured. The trunk was also tested for the effect of the weight of the prosthetic leg. The data were analysed by using the Wilcoxon signed rank test. The results showed a statistically significant difference between the prosthetic leg and the non-amputated limb. This is particularly relevant for the variables describing the movements of the trunk. On the other hand, there was no statistically significant difference between the prosthetic and non-amputated limbs in the biomechanical variables studied.Adiponectin in lymphocyte functions: evidence for a protective 1cdb3666d
