How to save a multi-layered Photoshop file as a JPEG You may have run into a situation where you need to save a multiple layer Photoshop file as a JPEG in order to attach it to your email. This is very common if you are sending a long list of figures, photos, charts, graphs, etc. It may not always be clear what layers the different objects belong to so you would like to save them in a certain order. The correct way to save a Photoshop file as a JPEG is to do it in layers. Layers will preserve the layers in the order you save them in. To save a multi-layer Photoshop file as a JPEG, choose File > Save As > Layers. Photoshop has many different tools that allow you to edit images, but few of them can be used to create images.

Photoshop has a wide variety of styles that have been developed and used in projects by professionals. You can take advantage of the styles in your projects, but you can also save time by creating your own styles. To create a custom Photoshop style, choose a style from the Style Manager (Window > Style Manager). Photoshop has two ways of viewing the pixels that make up an image. You can view an image as a small thumbnail showing only the pixels that make up the entire image or as a true-size image of the entire image. In order to view images as small thumbnails, go to Image > View and in the left hand side bar click the small arrow. This will take you to the View menu. Note that the View menu allows you to create a different view of the same image as long as you are viewing the image in the same image size. It will not allow you to view a different image size. You can also view different size images, but you cannot create a new image size from any of the view options. The following steps show how to add a new layer, modify the layer's alpha channel, and merge the layer into a background layer. To add a layer, choose Layer > New > Layer. Click OK to add the new layer, or click Cancel to back out of the layer dialog. If you are working in a group, you may want to click New Group before you create the new layer. To change the opacity of a layer, double-click it to get to the Layer Properties dialog box. In the Opacity field, enter a value from 0 to 100. You will notice that the
