Four years ago, while playing soccer with a friend in the back yard, FIFA Ultimate Team Manager A.J. Roberson and I captured the first data in-game that could be used for new gameplay features. As the saying goes, that magical moment led to a magical career. I have always wanted to make a game that truly captures the essence of soccer and my journey to EA Sports started with FIFA 16. The game that has become the most played video game in the world, delivered on that promise, but I felt we could do more. We started to think about what else we could bring to soccer that would be realistic and fun. After spending the last two years understanding the game, I knew we could bring our A game to the FIFA franchise. Early this year, we moved to Bellevue, Washington, to work closely with development to begin working on this new game, and, at the same time, I spent a lot of time experimenting with new technologies that could be applied to soccer. One of the first things that was available for me to experiment with was "HyperMotion Technology," which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. I can't go into specifics, as a result of the NDA we have, but we're making a real-time level that looks different from current FIFA levels. We're also making gameplay features that have never been tried before. Of course, we want to make sure the game has amazing soccer, and it has, in spades. I think that one of the things that makes this game stand out from the rest of the franchise is that everything from the core gameplay to how you play online is inspired by soccer. So, what are the features? The new player movement One of the things that I'm most proud of is how we've learned more about the way players move. Every real-life football game takes place in a 3-v-3 matchup. Imagine you're running the A.J. Inbox on the left flank, and you're running a player who's in your A.J. Inbox (MOT
