Players' movements are captured live and simultaneously during gameplay, along with the ball's movements. All of these data is stored in an advanced match engine to work independently, influencing a player's on-the-ball behaviour and ball physics. The accuracy and realism of these changes are constantly evaluated and improved upon throughout gameplay. FIFA 22 introduces "HyperMotion Technology," which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. Each game is as unique as the players who will play on it and as different from each other as the players who are playing them. Players' movements are captured live and simultaneously during gameplay, along with the ball's movements. All of these data is stored in an advanced match engine to work independently, influencing a player's on-the-ball behaviour and ball physics. The accuracy and realism of these changes are constantly evaluated and improved upon throughout gameplay. The game engine (GFX), developed by German company yBSystems, also makes significant use of high-definition video, which are streamed from multiple cameras installed around the pitch, not only to aid the team's viewing experience, but also to allow on-the-fly team management to amend a player's position, number, stamina, weight and so on. In addition, to further enhance players' viewing experience, the game engine also uses a full HD camera system for replay viewing. yBSystems, which is working with leading broadcast suppliers in the sports-on-demand and web TV markets, is the first in the world to offer a game engine and replay viewing capabilities in high definition. Because of the game engine and the improved viewing experience, the game will also feature a new high-definition game engine where users can also see even the most minute details of the pitch, players and crowd. It will allow users to download player information and match previews in high definition. Inspired by real life games, FIFA 22 also features Real Player Motion Technology, which takes the player movements created by the motion capture suits and uses them to create the illusion of players controlling the game from within the pitch with little or no lag. This makes gameplay feel more organic and realistic than ever before. Also new in FIFA 22 is "Matchday VR." This allows users to experience all the emotion, action and adrenaline of
