What's New In?

Monday, March 30, 2007 It happened. I'm a day late, but I have to post this. A great friend of mine from college lost her sister in a car accident on Saturday and it's made us all wonder how we would react if this happened to us. After my loss, I'd want to be with her. I thought I would jump up and down and cry, but this time I want to be one of her support system. On a side note, I was just commenting to my mom yesterday that I wish I would have been more fun to be around. I don't know why I thought that, especially when I was being fun. I think I was reflecting on her being so fun and being there for me through all my hard times that I see how I didn't have to go through hard times and that I had my parents, four sisters and John to help me through it. Maybe this is an ego thing? If I had to do it again, I'd like to talk to her more, make her smile more and hug her more. The past few weeks have been so hard for me. I wish I was more fun to be around. Yeah, I already know what I need to do, I need to be more fun. I know it's kinda dumb, but I just need to tell my mom that or she'll think it's about her. We're devastated.It does what it does to you.It doesn't matter what the event is, it will have a tremendous effect on the people who are close to you. I can't imagine what it's like for those people, dealing with that. I remember watching her talk a few days after my dad passed on. I wondered how she stayed so solid and I wondered if she ever thought of it. You can't really ever be ready, but you can try to be as prepared as you can be. I don't know that I would have been better at dealing with it, but I'm sure that I would have tried. I think it's that a lot of times we hold ourselves back. We think we have to be in a certain mood, we think we have to be in a certain mood to deal with something like that. Sometimes it doesn't have anything to do with what we feel and more to do with who is in our lives and how we react to a certain situation. You're not in the right mood. You're not in the right mood
