Working with Photoshop Elements If you have a Mac or PC and are looking for a budget alternative to Photoshop, you might want to explore the budget programs Photoshop Elements and Adobe Photoshop Elements. The program offers some of Photoshop's features and will let you edit your pictures and prepare them for the Web. If you use Photoshop Elements for a while, you'll be able to transition to Photoshop without any training. The process of learning Photoshop takes some time, and the programs offer some of the same features and tutorials as Photoshop. Photoshop Elements is the industry-standard image editing program for the Mac. It is a program for personal use. If you are considering the purchase of a new Mac computer, it's a good investment to pick up a copy of Photoshop Elements for editing your existing pictures. And it's well worth it if you plan to use Photoshop Elements more than once. If you plan to use Photoshop Elements to edit and create web graphics in addition to your regular editing duties, it's a good investment. It will be part of your ongoing workflow as you create more graphics for the Web. After picking up a copy of Photoshop Elements for your Mac, you'll see that it installs just like Photoshop. You also get all the editing features included, such as the ability to crop and resize images and layers, change their color, and do other common editing tasks. Most of the tutorials that are available online for learning Photoshop focus on the general purpose of using Photoshop rather than on the features in Photoshop Elements. This book concentrates on the features in the actual program. If you have an interest in web graphics, you'll find that you can take your output from Photoshop Elements and save it to the Web with a bit of tweaking. You can find a good portion of the tutorials that I use with Photoshop Elements on my website (www.beyondphotoshop.com). ## Capturing the Perfect Photo The time it takes to capture a perfect photo depends on the composition of the shot. Shutter speed controls the amount of light that strikes the camera's sensor. The higher the shutter speed, the less light that will reach the sensor. However, if you have a tripod, you can set the camera to a slow shutter speed without any tripod. The camera's built-in flash will then fill in the shadows. Capturing shadows is more important in as a possible nucleophile during initiation of the central rearrangement. Nevertheless, the rearrangement is remarkably different to the behaviour reported here, the two N^* -nucleophile activation pathways do not compete and whilst the position of the N^* -nucleophile in 36 is not critical in 38, the reactivity of 36 is found to be enhanced when the N^* -nucleophile is more remote. As the acidity of the monoanionic arene π -cation species in 24 and 27 is low, we have explored the behavior of such systems and the results are collected together in Scheme 7{ref-type="fig"}. The π -cation has a propensity to form either through electron donation to the arene π -system or through π -donation to the arene π -system. The first species to form is, as in the initiation of the central rearrangement, the higher oxazoline derivative with the electron donor adjacent to the arene π -system. This creates a non-basic π -cation that is less polarisable than the nucleophiles in Scheme 5{ref-type="fig"} and hence has a lower pK^*_{a} . Thus, at low pH, the rate of cleavage should increase as the reactivity of the nucleophile increases, in agreement with the experimental results. However, the reaction cannot be rate limited at sufficiently low pH, resulting in rate constants that are too large to be measured reliably by the manual stop-watch method.[@cit20] Thus, a rate limiting step subsequent to the formation of the π -cation is shown to occur. This step is also rate limiting at high pH, but the pK^*_{a} of the π -cation with the adjacent arene is such that the rate of the rearrangement is increased relative to the rate of cleavage and hence the pK^_{a} of the π -cation with the adjacent arene π -system is not as low as that for 36. When the oxazoline ring is moved such that the N^ -nucleophile is more remote in this reaction (42), the rate of the reaction is increased, as expected for an adjacent N^* -nucleophile. However, the pK^*_{a}

The new options for KiwiSaver members are the result of a number of extensions to the fund's rules and governance in the past five years. The most significant change is the shift from a lifetime benefit to a "use it or lose it" proposal, by which a member's contributions will reduce to only about 25 per cent of their value after 35 years of contributions. To maintain their retirement benefits, members will need to make new contributions equal to the amount by which their previous contributions were insufficient to hit the earnings cap in the fund. Those who haven't hit the earnings cap by their 53rd birthday will receive at least the full amount they would have if they had not missed the deadline. The fund will be able to provide additional financial returns to cover the shortfall, but all members will still receive their full retirement benefit if the shortfall exceeds the additional returns. The lifetime benefit option is an extension of the original proposal, which would have reduced the retirement benefit for anyone who didn't contribute enough during their working life. The maximum limit of 7.2 per cent net earnings, the equivalent of an 8 per cent after-tax salary, is unchanged. Contributions to the fund are taxed at 17.5 per cent, though the government will waive this for members under the age of 18. The extension of the earnings cap is the main change to the original rule-change proposal. The earnings cap would be the same as it is for working adults. A member who doesn't contribute enough throughout their working life will not receive a retirement benefit, but their savings will be protected and there will be no taxes on them. However, the earnings cap would increase to $190,000 at retirement. The original proposal to extend the earnings cap would have applied to a member's savings from their age 18. If a member doesn't reach that limit in their working life, they would forfeit their savings. The results of the four tests were announced at an Auckland fund management conference on Friday. The fund has gained back almost one-third of the value of its portfolio since it was put into trusteeship in September last year. The portfolio has risen more than $4 billion to $245.4 billion
