Rainmeter can be used by anybody provided that rainmeter.org and the source code (or any executable) is not used. Rainmeter provides some customization options. It could be used in many different ways, for example: - to display and/or record live data from the Internet. - to display status information of applications (ex: AIM, INBOX...). - to display weather information. - to record the weather over a certain period (ex: from 1 to 10 years). Rainmeter is widely used on the Internet. For example, a video or a blog may mention rainmeter.org, or another website may offer the full source code (or any executable) to read and/or interpret the rainmeter output. Consequently, rainmeter.org can be seen as a wallpaper that can be changed by users who want to adapt it to their needs. For this reason, rainmeter.org and the source code (or any executable) are protected by a GNU General Public License version 2 (GPLv2). Please visit the rainmeter.org website to get more information on the license (or your particular case of use). It is forbidden to copy or distribute the rain
