Kotler, P.J.: Marketing, (Haines & MeleË™s Theories), .Sinonasal antral mucosa is a well-recognized histological marker of chronic rhinosinusitis (CRS) in middle-aged and elderly patients with nasal polyps. Moreover, Eosinophilic Mucin Exocytosis (EME) has been recognized as a novel histological feature in CRS with nasal polyps (CRSwNP), and it is associated with a Th2 polarization. However, there is no information about the association of these histological features with disease severity and prognosis. We evaluated the relationship between these histological features, immunological markers, and prognosis in a homogenous group of CRSwNP patients. Methods ===== A total of 96 patients with CRSwNP who underwent endoscopic sinus surgery were included. Demographics and clinical features were recorded at the time of surgery. We evaluated the pre- and postoperative number of eosinophils in the tissue sample under the basement membrane and the severity of EME using hematoxylin and eosin staining of the tissue sections. The number of inflammatory cells was evaluated by three independent observers. The presence of EME was assessed semi-quantitatively by using a five-point scale and as a dichotomous variable (the presence/absence of EME). B cell, CD4 T cell, and Th2 polarization and macrophage and neutrophil polarization were analyzed by immunohistochemical
