My Partner and I have been happily married for about 2 years and about a month ago i caught her in the act with another man. Although we were married when it happened, we had a big blowup two weeks later and she wouldnt talk to me. She said that she did nothing wrong and im the one with the problem. Every time i start to have a conversation with her, she says shes just not in the mood and then shes spending time with this man. I can tell from her behavior shes lying to me but i dont know the right way to get her to change her mind. I have tried talking to her, touching her when it gets to that point but shes not ready to talk to me. When i have that moment with her she doesnt take me into consideration, shes all about her man. I know he wants to be with her because he told me that her ex is threatening her to stick with him. She hasnt been to any of her appointments because shes with him. I have got to be patient and not press the issue but i just feel like a piece of *. Im convinced that if i force her, things will only get worse. I dont know what to do, im so confused. The man shes with is so much better than me. I just dont get it. Any advice will be great. Thank You. In this review, the authors discuss how to read a radiology report, learn the evaluation of such findings, and use them to assess a patient's condition. Radiology reports should be considered as clinical evidence for diagnosis and therapy. The radiologist's report should include a detailed narrative statement of the radiographic findings, the diagnostic information needed to assess the findings, and the supporting images. The classic medical librarian's approach to report reading will suffice in most instances. When alternative diagnoses or prognoses must be ruled in or out, the radiologist should include these comments and any differential diagnoses. One must ask, "What does this radiologic finding tell me about the patient?" And "What next?" This has evolved into something of a "research professorial feature." I aim to bring to your attention and tease out patterns and trends that are driving current research. To that end, I welcome your contributions to this new project, which will be hosted on the History News Network here. The San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge is a pair of twin suspension bridges over the western portion of the San Francisco Bay, connecting San Francisco's East Bay to Oakland. The two 1.7 mile-long bridges, also known as the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, are the world's fifth and sixth longest suspension bridges, and the longest of its kind in the world. The bridge was built between 1953 and 1963. It is unique in that it is a combined highway and pedestrian walkway. The bridge is open to traffic from 5:30AM to 8:30PM, but is "nearly always" closed to car traffic at night. Cameras on both bridges allow for the evening walking experience to be viewed by visitors, photographers, and everyday commuters. The two bridges are also illuminated with 100,000 LED lights on each side. This unique bridge has
