Using the data, the FIFA team, which includes Director of Player Intelligence Chris Mortimer, has created an 'AI Player' based off the real players. The AI Player is the first of many further enhancements coming to FIFA as the team continue to evolve the game's artificial intelligence. This new technology revolutionises the shooting mechanics, ball control and mobility, as well as creating a speedier on-ball action. The advancements to the shooting mechanics will allow players to simulate the movement of a ball just before it enters the player's foot, making every shot more of a hit. The video below gives you a taste of how the new on-ball action feels as well as a deeper look at how the new 'HyperMotion' Player AI compares to real-life players. The shot is absolutely stunning as it falls into the back of the net. This new tech, along with other improvements, will make an instant impact on how you play - watching closely as your striker separates from the defender and fake to a pass and make a step back to shoot. Matt Harris from FIFA understands the importance of this new 'HyperMotion' tech and its impact on your gameplay. "Our 'HyperMotion' technology is based on the movements of 22 real-life players while they played a typical football match," said Matt Harris, Head of Football at EA SPORTS. "This captures the true essence of every player and is our best attempt to date at creating authentic movement based on real players." "This unique set of data allows us to create a more realistic physics engine, ball movement and recoveries, and improve the artificial intelligence of your players. This results in faster, more accurate football and a better overall experience,” Harris continued. Thanks to this incredible advancement, FIFA 20 looks to bring a definitive soccer experience to PC, Xbox One, PS4, Switch, and Xbox One X.
