Doppler on-road assessment of a banded pulsatile flow in a carotid bifurcation model. The aim of this study was to assess the pulsatile flow character of a carotid artery bifurcation model, with and without an artificial stenosis in the common carotid artery segment, with respect to common carotid artery blood flow. A simultaneous assessment of the continuous increase and decrease in the blood velocity of the common carotid artery on the transition from systole to diastole and vice versa is not reported in the literature. A flow visualization method was used to assess blood flow characteristics in a carotid artery bifurcation model consisting of a human radial artery branch and the connected external carotid artery segment. The topology of this model was based on a high-quality three-dimensional model of a human carotid artery bifurcation. A major stenosis at the origin of the internal carotid artery was included. The velocity of the blood flow was assessed with real-time four-dimensional imaging (Doppler on-road assessment). The blood flow was assessed at steady state, taking into account the heart rate. The Doppler on-road assessment allowed a simultaneous assessment of the continuous increase and decrease in blood velocity on the transition from systole to diastole and vice versa in the common carotid artery, making it possible to discern the acceleration and deceleration phases. The flow characteristics in the model of the common carotid artery with a stenosis differed from those of the normal blood flow. This effect was particularly accentuated in the longitudinal section of the common carotid artery. A stenosis in the common carotid artery caused a depression of the Doppler on-road spectra in the carotid flow field. The developed Doppler on-road assessment was able to discern the pulsatile character of the blood flow in the common carotid artery with and without a stenosis. The present invention relates to a switch, and in particular to a switch with a limited-power operation mode. Various electronic devices, such as a notebook computer or PDA, are widely used in our daily life. Many of those electronic devices are powered by a rechargeable battery pack. Hence, users need to frequently to change the battery pack for a new battery pack. As a result, a novel battery pack saving device is needed to address the aforementioned issue. A conventional switch is disclosed

I have been following Dr. Lovell's progress for years as you can see in this thread on another site. He is a true master of what he does and his staff, staff and facility are the best. I am an AATSM Fellow and have worked with him extensively, including in a government program evaluating best practices for plastic surgery.
