You can tell by the sharp teeth on the edges of its mouth that it's carnivorous, but what kind of fish is it? A: Possibly a fish, maybe one of the freshwater guppies that are common in zoos? A: This is an antelope, but the picture was taken from an aquarium. was used as a "control" to a match with a rat over a six-week period. Whole-bladder weights were obtained from three animals in each group at the beginning and at the end of the experimental period, and hematoxylin-eosin-stained sections were prepared for histomorphometric evaluation. Histomorphometric measures of muscle fiber diameter and mean cell area were calculated from sections. In the fast muscle fibers, the mean cell area and diameter of the control group increased significantly from day 56 through day 84 of the experiment, indicating the formation of new muscle fibers. The increase in muscle fiber diameter in the control group was almost identical to the increase in the experimental group (Fig. 3{ref-type="fig"}). In the slow muscle fibers, the mean cell area
