This paper presents a new framework for discovering software at the granularity level of families of components, which are used by modern software. This framework is based on a global view of software, which is at odds with past models that focused on components and modules of different software families. New semantic identifiers and message-passing protocols have been designed to enable the utilization of software families and provide their unique services. The overall discovery process is belongs to the order angiosperm family Cannabaceae. Cannabis species are grown for both medicine and recreational use. Cannabis plants grow up to five feet tall, may be grown indoors or outdoors, and have long narrow leaves or small palm-like leaves. The flowers are small in size but produce an abundance of sticky resin-filled trichomes and seeds. The resin has a distinctive aroma and flavor. THC is the most psychoactive compound of cannabis. Cannabinoids occur in different forms, such as tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), phytocannabinoid, synthetic cannabinoids, cannabidiol (CBD) and cannabichromene (CBC). Synthetic cannabinoids are primarily a class of compounds that exhibit the effects of THC, such as euphoria or intoxication, but lack a high from the psychoactive effects of THC. Although THC is responsible for most of the psychoactive effects of cannabis, there are hundreds of cannabinoids that can be found in the cannabis plant. Cannabis has a wide range of cannabis sativa varieties that differ in the levels of THC, CBD, and
