They are native to southern and tropical Asia. They are evergreen climbing plants with slender thorns. The leaves have distinct soft spines. The flowers, about 2-3 cm wide, have five sepals and five petals, which may be white, pink or rose-red. They are dioecious. The fruit is a hanging capsule, containing many seeds. Daphniphyllum species are widely cultivated as climbing or twining plants in tropical and subtropical areas. They are often called trumpet creeper, because they are often used as bonsai. Taxonomy The genus was named by Robert Brown in 1841. The Latin name means "thorny leaf" and refers to the thorns on the leaves. Spe
