In an NFL season that has been largely underwhelming, one team has stood out from the crowd. The NFL on NBC analyst was kind enough to join the show to discuss the Atlanta Falcons' roller coaster season. In his weekly analysis of the state of the league, Tony Romo took a slightly different route than normal, as he dropped his usual scale from "bad" all the way to "terrible" and opened up with the surprisingly (to me) undefeated Atlanta Falcons. Romo opened up the show by breaking down why Atlanta has been so dominant. "Their body of work and the thing that's I think that's the most extraordinary about this team, is when you look at some of the teams that were winning playoff games, they were winning five playoff games in a row and five of the last six years. "People were saying, 'Oh, how much of a team can they be?' Because they're not some passing team, they're not some run-and-shoot team. They're an incredibly physical team. They are a finesse team, and they're not on the big part of the field and they're not going to get lots of yardage. "But they're doing it through the air a great deal of times, with everybody on the field for them. They're a team that maybe was going to be the underdog in this division and they're the No. 1 seed, so they get home-field advantage." And, according to Romo, Atlanta has some attributes that make them stand out. "The competitive nature that they have. They are not a team that's going to ride that deep tub to keep the focus. They are a team that's going to go for broke and they're going to get to the point where they have to win. They have done that a number of times this year. "When they've lost games, they come and play the final quarter. They've done that a lot. They are not the kind of team that won't go at you. They will go at you and use every shot they can. They don't want to run the ball. They want to throw it, run the pitch and catch. They'

GOMA, Democratic Republic of Congo — The days I was in Congo had already begun to drag on when, for the first time in two years, the world seemed to wake up to the crisis in the country. In the past two years, the attacks had come as part of a general, constant, low-level menace that forced people to leave their homes to the point of making the country unrecognizable. But in May, the attacks shifted.

They shifted into something more deadly, more organized and, ultimately, more troubling than anything Congo had experienced before. We know little about the particular group or groups that launched these attacks, but their targets were the leaders of the opposition and the government. The people they threatened were the foreign diplomats and employees who had come in to try and run an election. And the attacks were clearly designed to shake people, to paralyze the country, to show that Congo was disorganizing and that the international organizations that had come to help were ineffective. The regime that is trying to hold on to power in Congo had something to say about that. President Joseph Kabila was in Goma, a city close to the border with Rwanda, trying to hold on to the seat of the parliament for a third term in office. The government was trying to stop the vote. It had been arguing that voters were intimidated and that interference from the Rwandan government was the reason. But elections had taken place in December, and opposition candidates had won. A political analyst who had taken part in those elections told me that the government had deliberately and systematically failed to provide any security, that it had allowed people to be killed and robbed, that it had not been ready for its people to vote.Penetration of human sperm through the zona pellucida in vitro: comparison of a magnetic stimulation approach with a conventional zona-binding technique. A new magnetic stimulation approach for in vitro penetration of human sperm was compared with the standard zona-binding technique for its ability to penetrate and agglutinate zona-free hamster ova. Results indicate that the magnetic stimulation is superior to the zona-binding technique as reflected by higher penetration rates and greater efficiency in the agglutination of zona-free hamster ova.
