Q: deleting last few rows of data in CSV, sorted alphabetically I am trying to delete the last few rows of data in a csv file, so as to make it smaller without losing data. I am using the code below: `import csv with open('data_1.csv', 'rb') as data_file: reader = csv.reader(data_file, delimiter=',') reader.truncate(-5) with open("data_new.csv", 'w') as data_file_new: writer = csv.writer(data_file_new) writer.writerows(reader)` My data csv file is also sorted alphabetically. I expect that the last 5 rows of the file will be deleted. But the output csv file has 5 rows of data remain in it instead of only 5 rows. I have also tried using `del` (to delete the last five elements) and that didn't work. Why is it? How can I solve it? A: When you open the file "with `open('data_1.csv', 'rb')` as `data_file`": You are opening the file with read mode, this means that the mode is read the file line by line, so the last line will be the last in the file. To open the file in append mode to create a new file, change the line as following: `open('data_1.csv', 'a')` Please check the documentation about mode to get the difference between these two modes.

Ultrastructure of the cleptoparasite Zydocerella martinliana (Acanthocephala: Polymorphidae). Ultrastructure of the cleptoparasite Zydocerella martinliana is described. The microscopic size and the structure of the developed acanthorhynch host remains unchanged. The trematode penetrates the epidermis of the host, leaving a scar on the epidermis. The acanthorhynch is covered with specialised lanceolate membrane structures and 1-3 spines. The parasite occupies about 1/3 of the acanthorhynch and are arranged in parallel. The complicated structure of the parasite suggests that it can increase its protection from the environment by a

Q: Segmentation Fault on a a `malloc()`'ed matrix I am learning C at the moment using Kernighan & Ritchie's 'C Programming Language.' In the exercise chapters, they ask the reader to create a function that allocates and initialises a matrix. I have taken the function and used it in my code, but I'm getting a segmentation fault. I'm not quite sure why, so I'm hoping I'm making a rookie mistake somewhere...
`struct matrix_t { int size; int elements[10]; }; void init_matrix(struct matrix_t matrix) { size_t i, j; / Dummy initialisation, to work out size of array */ for(i=0; ielements[i*5 + j] = 0; } } /* Allocate space for` 5x5 elements array, and initialise each element to 0 */ matrix->size = 5; for(i=0; ielements[i*5 + j] = 0; } The function is called like so: void main() { struct matrix_t *matrix = malloc(sizeof(struct matrix_t)); init_matrix(matrix); } The program compiles and runs fine, with no warning or errors when compiling on my version of MinGW. But the problem is when I run it, I get a segmentation fault. I'd like to know whether I'm doing something wrong, or whether it might just be a compiler/version of MinGW issue? A: You cannot write to an address that was previously "returned" to you
