Hamas, the Islamist group that took control of Gaza in 2007, has since become dominated by Salafist imams who strongly oppose Rafiq's moderate, nuanced and pragmatic brand of Islam. The group has fought three major wars with Israel, including a 50-day conflict during its last war in 2012. In addition to targeting Gaza's Christian population and imposing a strict interpretation of Islam, Hamas has also issued death sentences against its critics. Israel targeted anti-Hamas Salafists before the 2014 war, and in recent years its army has gradually begun to target Salafists in the West Bank. According to a report published last month by Israeli newspaper Maariv, roughly 3,000 Salafists have been targeted by Israeli forces since 2010. Israeli army spokesman Lt. Col. Peter Lerner told Haaretz at the time that the military had been seeking out Salafists in areas controlled by Hamas, and that there was a "significant divide between Hamas members and their supporters." Rafiq was shot last August on August 31 after being targeted by the Israeli army while driving through the Gaza district of Jabalya. According to Palestinian doctors who have
