HyperMotion technology combines three main components: heart rate data used to calculate a player's physicality, real-time physical movement data, which is used to create a more realistic gameplay experience, and lighting, animations and crowd behavior enhancements. FIFA.com's Andreas Cornelius looks into the new features and aims to bring you all the latest FIFA 22 news, reviews and features. FIFA.com: Can you tell us a little bit more about what this new "HyperMotion" feature brings to FIFA? Andreas Cornelius: The most important thing about "HyperMotion" is the fact that it is a real-time update. As soon as the ball is in play, the game uses the game physics engine to animate and render the actions in a more lifelike manner. Using a large number of player movements and tackles that we captured during in-game action videos, we're now able to predict the outcome of almost every event before it happens. More interesting than that is the fact that we managed to calibrate the game physics engine without degrading the movement or aerodynamics, which means you can expect a more realistic feeling compared to last year's FIFA. Another new feature is that FIFA 22 will use player heart rates and breathing speeds to calculate physicality scores. This is the first time that we use heart rate data to affect the gameplay. This means that the more you exert yourself, the more physical you are - literally! Although this could be a double-edged sword, as we see in many sports, it will bring a new dimension to football. FIFA.com: How does the new "HyperMotion" technology work in practice? Andreas Cornelius: If you've been in possession of the ball for a while, you will notice that the animations for you, the opponents and the other players around you are more precise. As we mentioned before, "HyperMotion" starts before any action happens - by collecting in-game data from 22 players we were able to improve the speed of our in-game engine, and calibrate the physics engine with it. This results in a more lifelike gameplay experience. FIFA.com: What are the most important improvements to physicality and collision mechanics? Andreas Cornelius: The physics engine has a number of improvements in the areas of pitch awareness, collision response and

Green Party of Massachusetts held its Fall Forum yesterday in Worcester, where over a hundred people gathered to hear from candidates running for governor, Lt. Governor, state senator, and city council. The evening kicked off with a talk from Aaron Minter, who will be running for Lt. Governor, followed by one from gubernatorial candidates Jill Stein and Ajamu Baraka. On the campaign trail, I interviewed candidates on the issues that matter most to voters from all over Massachusetts. Here are some of my favorite interviews: In his speech, Ajamu Baraka shared the stories of a wide range of members of the community who came to see him, not just because they liked him, but because they felt he could be different from the rest. Often, we think that people vote based on issues, but what people really care about is a change in perspective that moves them to action. When we are able to ask questions about issues that touch their personal experiences, we can begin to move people who are unsure about voting to commit their votes. If you like the sound of a bold, progressive agenda for Massachusetts, keep an eye out for "Good Jobs, Better Schools: The Green Party's Agenda for Change," coming in the fall, and read my article on the Green New Deal released on the Boston Phoenix website. After the forum, I had a chance to speak with the candidates who I had interviewed to find out what was most important to them. I asked questions like: "What led you to your decision to run?" and "What are the top priorities in Massachusetts that you would prioritize?" Here are a few highlights of their responses: Aaron Minter I'm running for Lieutenant Governor because I believe that the top priority in the Commonwealth should be to address the staggering income and wealth inequality that exists today. People across the Commonwealth are working harder than ever, but we're bc9d6d6daa
