Zooming In and Out Zooming in and out is one of the most widely used tools in Photoshop. Adobe Photoshop provides the most accurate zooming tools available, allowing users to zoom in with the ease of a mouse drag or zoom out with the control-wheel. The zoom tool The zoom tool is used to zoom in and out. It includes two different zoom modes: vertical and horizontal. If you are zoomed in on a photo, you can change the mode to vertical to see how the photo appears. Control-wheel zoom The control-wheel zoom is often used when working on a smaller aspect ratio. Normally, horizontal zoom is used for these images, but if you click the control-wheel in the top right corner and move it left to right, you will get a bigger image so you can see the photo more clearly. If you move the control-wheel up or down, you will move closer to or farther away from the subject. Zooming Levels If you are zoomed in on an image, you can use the zoom levels tool by clicking the icon in the bottom left of the Photoshop window to display different zoom levels. If you click on one of the zoom levels and move the mouse to the top, you will be able to toggle between the different zoom levels in the image. Rotate Left If you want to rotate a photo, you will need to hold the Ctrl and Shift keys down on your keyboard and click the image and drag it to rotate it in the desired direction. You can do this with a photo, vector, or raster image. If you click the rotate icon in the top right corner, you will be able to rotate the photo in the image in the left hand side of your screen. Aspect Ratio Sometimes you may need to use an aspect ratio that isn't the default ratio

The Asian American population is one of the fastest growing racial/ethnic subgroups in the U.S. and more than half of this new population is composed of first-generation immigrants. Health care for the immigrant Asian population is of growing concern due to their poor health status, which in some cases is poorer than the general population. As a consequence of the large number of Asian immigrants in the U.S., researchers are increasingly interested in studying the health issues of the first generation population. Most of the previous research on Asian health is focused on disease outcomes of the second generation population. Yet, this research is often based on limited samples of second generation, large-scale studies, and therefore may not adequately represent the whole Asian population. The purpose of this study is to investigate the impact of first generation background variables on the major chronic diseases of the second generation. To achieve this goal, the proposed research will utilize data from the Chinese Adult Health, Genomics, and Nutrition Study (CAHGNS), a large and comprehensive survey of the adult Chinese population living in six Chinese cities. Using the data from a series of Chinese cultural-specific quantitative and qualitative research methods, a direct approach will be taken to examine relationships between immigrant status and acculturation level with the following four major chronic diseases: diabetes, heart disease, stroke, and cancer.Q: Angular2 - Property 'array' does not exist on type 'Object' I am using angular2. World Peace & Unification – Part 2 "The key to world peace is in the person of every man, woman, and child. I have met people from every religious persuasion; I've had discussions in which I found my attitudes changed to their point of view, and I have been instructed by many on how to live. I believe that if we could continue to meet in the spirit of love, the world's problems would dissolve." – from the writings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, who said he was a Seer of the Heavenly Father. See The Words of the Lord.To understand the causes and impacts of global resource shortages, it is necessary to understand the challenges of current population, economic and environmental policies. Globalisation has changed the way we live, work, play and make things. As technology has become more connected and more efficient, many jobs have disappeared and people have had to adapt their lifestyles. While it is challenging for some to adapt, others have found ways to adapt their lives, and instead make a living and earn an income in new ways – creating exciting new trends and new opportunities. How will we manage the demands we place on our resources? How much could we change our own behaviours? What could we all do to make this transition work? Resources and Consumption The world today uses about 70% of its resources – leaving little for the future, and how could we manage the change we are seeing? Today's population is seven billion people, expected to be over nine billion by 2050. The size of the world's economy is expected to be ten times larger than today. Current consumption trends are directly linked to the high population numbers, and this high consumption has the potential to increase even further in the future. Yet for most of the world, government policies are working against the growth of resources – instead, they are often working to the reduce the availability of resources. If we want a world with a balance of both economic growth and access to clean air, soil, water, and renewable energy, the world needs to think about changing consumption patterns and about how to meet the needs of the world's population while making sure that we can still enjoy the world we live in.
