Roblox is a sandbox video game development platform and game engine that allows players to create their own virtual, 3D games or in some cases, modify pre-existing games. Players can access games and game development tools online for free, and games are hosted on the Roblox server. Players can then download and play a game (which includes in-game purchase) either on Roblox or any other device. The platform was designed to enable its players to become game developers, and since its release, Roblox has expanded to include game editors and an IDE for creating games with Lua, a set of programming modules for producing source code and engine scripts. The idea of the Roblox platform is for the online community of users to have control over the games. Roblox intends for players to be game developers within their communities, with each community generating its own games. Roblox provides a broad range of tools, community features, social networks, and channels for its users to communicate and collaborate. Players can customize their profiles, define their own rooms, participate in online game play, and connect with friends. The ability to customize a player's room was added to Roblox in 2008. Roblox launched its social network in 2009, allowing members to build their own social networks or connect to other online communities. Roblox added video games to its platform in 2010, and for other online communities to feature games for its users. Users also need to specify which other players they would like to communicate with, and Roblox communicates with players by establishing private connections. Roblox Content: The core content of Roblox is a set of Roblox Studio tools that make it easy to create games and features such as mapping, online profile creation, saving, and editing rooms. The user interface provides tools to build and animate models of objects, and provides text and color tools to add realism and depth to their games. A template is a “game template” that developers can use as a foundation for developing their own games. Templates are intended to make it easy to create a variety of different types of games. Developers can design their own templates or create a game using pre-made templates. Each game on Roblox is called a “World”, which includes a set of rooms that the player can visit in that game. Games are centered on a narrative, and a player makes choices about what to do in the game that affects that narrative. The standard
